litics, at all events for the present. What are the facts? In the first place the opposition of both Russia and China would have to be faced. There is no doubt that Russia has an eye to the acquisition of Thibet for berself; witness the determined efforts made by her military explorers to penetrate the country and examine its at daylight on the 29th August, and that the the dragon in the most terrific shape that has defendant Ng Chau Fong that the monies when his body was found in one of the filter resources and conditions. How suspicious Brindisi left London for this port on the 28th ever been given to it; and it would probably be received or to be claimed by him from John bads. It is somewhat difficult to surmise how the Thibetans and Chinese were of Muscovite intentions was sufficiently shown by the determined repulse met with by the intrepid and persevering PREJAVALSKY, who was rudely driven back on the very threshold of the great plateau. There is little doubt that the Thibetaus were atimulated to oppose the great traveller's entrance by force by the Treasurer of Shantung, while his own post Chinese Resident, as it is notorious the which he is to vacate is to be conferred on Tong Peking: Government regard any attempt break in upon the seclusion of the Thibetans by Foreign Powers with extreme disfavour and mistrust. No doubt Russia might be squared or disregarded. but even then the British Government would have the tenacious resistance of China to don't with, a resistance that we believe could only be broken down by at Shanghai by Japanese closed on the 24th defeat in a war, or by the combined pressure of Russia and England. It will be remembered that the Separate Article to the Chefoo Convention, by which it was agreed that a Mission of Exploration should be sent by England, starting from Peking and journeying through Kansuh and Koko-Nor ported yesterday, it may be noted that the [1874] or by way of Szechnen to Thibet and thence to India, was cancelled by Article IV, of the Throne by Li Han-chang, the Vicercy of the unfortunate Convention negotiated at Peking in July, 1886, by Mr. O'Conon. That gentleman allowed himself to be terribly overreached on that occasion'; China was so anxious to obtain the cancellation of this tative of the late agents, Mesers. Schönhard would willingly have foregone any sop to her claim to suzerainty over Burmah in order to gain that concession. It would be very difficult now to win her consent to the despatch of such a Mission, however well assured she might be of its purely scientific Room for seamen and others takes place this character and object. The recent hostifor this Season has arrived and we are now pre- lities carried on by the Thibetans against H.E. the Acting Governor has kindly consented the British forces in Sikkim were also intended as a broad hint to England to restrain her curiosity, and if not directly inspired by the Chinese Government were manifestly approved by them, seeing that they never interfered to check the aggression of their tributary. Any attempt therefore to occupy Thibet would not only be strennously resisted by the fanatical lamas, who quite sufficient to only state the numbers of the dominate the people, but these fighting priests would be strongly backed up by Chins, and an invading force would assured ly flux battations of Chinese soldiers ready Thibet is the designation of an extensive region stretching on the man from 78 deg. to 104 deg. E. longitude, forming indeed a huge cap to Hindostan, and is geographically an Indian rather than a Chinese dependency, though it must be admitted that racially the Thibetans are cognate to the Chinese. The area is somewhat over 30,000 square miles, and the western portion—the only part at all known by Europeans-is a lofty table-land with a dry climate, where the air is so rarefied that travellers at first respire it with difficulty. The cold is, however, not excessive, and the climate is no doubt fairly suited to the European constitution. The country in Western Thibet is very mountainous and is singularly bare of forests or large vegetable products, but affords good grazing ground for vast herds of cattle, sheep, and goats. Barley, wheat, and peas are the chief crops, and there is no great variety of fruit or vegetables, "but no doubt these could be largely increased by cultiva- end to the trouble this calamity was bringing and address with communications addressed to the | tion. An sitercation then occurred and the case was settled by the decision of the bystanders that the two friends should beg the waiter's pardon. This they did, but after leaving the shop they felt the shame so keeply that they could not bear it, so they purchased one dollar's worth of opium and swallowed it between them and went back to the tea-shep and died there.
